Rita Mae Brown quotes that "Language is the road map of a culture. It tells you where its people come from and where they are going."

I agree with that statement, because, first of all, it allows us to communicate with people from other countries. Each nation has its own unique culture, and thus we can learn about them from the original host by learning their or international language.

Second of all, we could listen to people talking about their history and traditions, interact with them, ask them questions, and gain knowledge. We could also have an idea of where the person comes from by asking what their mother language is.

To give an example, I have become friends with a small group of people who live outside of my country. We often exchange some information about our cultures and traditions with each other. Sometimes we explain meanings of a few words from our mother language, talk about great people who were born in our countries and many ^{much} more.

To sum up, I think that language is an important tool that helps us with breaking the barrier and allows us to broaden our knowledge in understanding other people.
